Brief report of the activity	The Department of Commerce and Management Studies hosted an insightful guest lecture by Dr. E. Appa Rao on "Stock Market Speculations in India." The event aimed to enhance students' understanding of the dynamic Indian stock market and its speculative trends. Dr. Rao, an expert in financial markets, elucidated key concepts of stock market speculation, including risk factors, market volatility, and investor behavior. He emphasized the influence of macroeconomic factors, such as inflation and policy changes, on market trends, drawing from recent Indian market scenarios. The lecture highlighted the importance of informed decision-making and cautioned against speculative pitfalls. Engaging case studies and real-world examples enriched the session, fostering active participation from students. The interactive Q&A segment allowed attendees to clarify doubts and gain practical insights. The event successfully bridged theoretical knowledge with practical applications, inspiring students to explore financial markets critically. The DCMS faculty thanked Dr. Rao for his valuable contribution to the academic community.
